

The "Do Not Call List" is a conflict in my life. On one hand, I work for the countries largest communications company. On the other I am a resident of NJ, who hates cold calls from miscellaneous companies. There is nothing more annoying to get home from work, the phone is ringing and you run to the phone because it may be very important. Then to discover it is an agency trying to sell you realestate in Florida or something like that. For years I was so stressed by this. I actually have broken several phones because of this, slamming the phone down does not work, telling the caller to remove you from their list does not work. The "Do Not Call List" is the only thing that has worked for me in the past 15 months. My life is so much more stress free, knowing that when the phone rings it is for me not for a sales pitch. I do not like people calling me if I do not know them. Please take everyones comment seriously. I have heard the FCC is trying to allow Cell phone cold calling... Is this true? This is outrageous! That is someones personal space! You are attempting to allow invation of privacy. It is unconstitutional to allow such activity to continue. Please reevaluate your decisions more than once, think about yourselves and how you feel if you were called 15-20 times per day for a sales pitch. It is completely absurd. OK, That is all I have to say, that is enough for now, until next time, PEACE.
Tedd Tilton